ESSAY - Our First Language:
Why Kids Need Poetry
by Zaida Lanna Blackwater

I believe poetry belongs in every kid's backpack. Poetry came to me through stories read to my parents at night, songs learned on the playground, and my first grade teacher, whose poetry curriculum was also a primer in writing techniques and writing with purpose.

For me poetry is akin to my favorite garden shovel: always on hand for fun and difficult work alike. I see poetry to do through questions: On October 31, 2011 our world population passed 7 billion, and what does that mean for our children in the future?

When I consider how we will learn to share justice and prosperity among seven a billion of our 7 billion people, I can only conclude that we must first learn to do the work of poetry. In sharing poems with kids from alphabets onward, we equip them with critical tools for twenty-first century conversation.

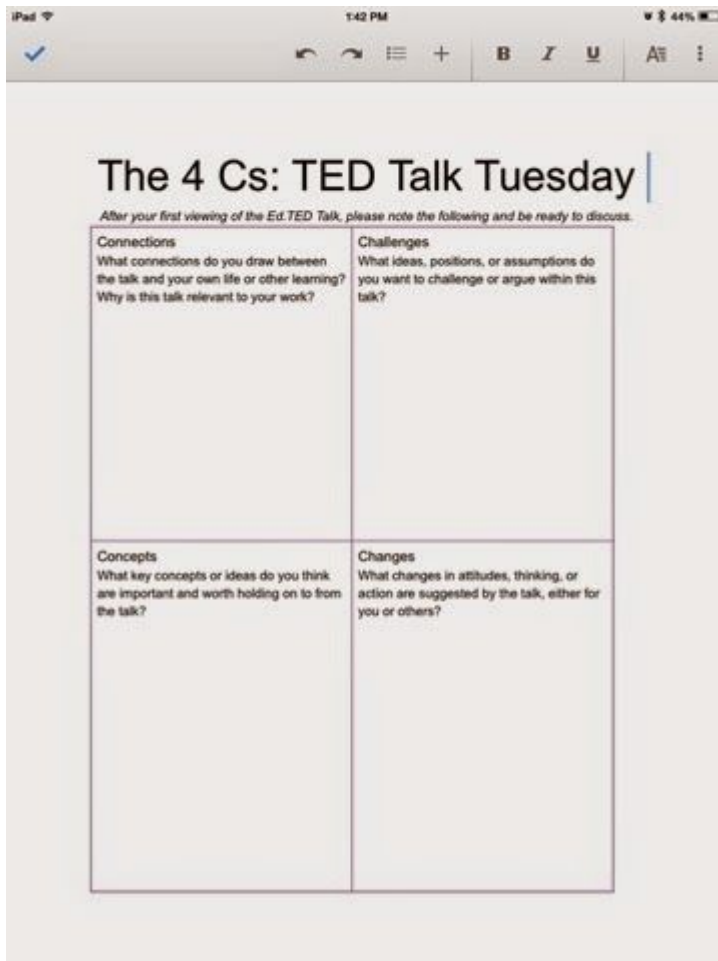

Poetry is practice in communication basics like curiosity, attentiveness, patience, confidence, and empathy. To interpret poetry, we must cultivate a sensitivity for the experiences of other people; attend carefully to each word; have the patience to read through repetition and gaps; maintain the confidence to be honest in our responses; and use our empathy to allow each poet's words and experiences to broaden our world perspectives.

These same communication skills enable us to connect and collaborate in groups. Cooperation
